Thanks.

I would like to tell her that she can go to my appt., if I am really needed for court. Since I am not looking forward to it, anyways. But I will be nice.
Have a good weekend.

Hey Annie,

Yes, that is insane. No one can question you as to why you have a doctor's appointment and for what is it for. It's not only illegal but rude.

It is ridiculous, no question about it. No one should be asking you stuff like that.

Not that it matters but what if it was something serious? Would this person really like to know, or tell the court??

On your side on this one.

Hey George,

Just venting.

Out of curiosity, is this rude or I am just loosing my marbles?

I had an ADA question why I was not going to be able to appear for her trial. Told her I was taking a pers. day for doctor's appt. She wanted to know what kind of an appt. and if I could re-schedule it. That was very weird.

I am just a little p-off that I have explain why I am taking a day off for a district court case that will most likely get continued anyways. Ridic.

Thanks for listening. :)
